responsibility as the other is not going to be punished as severely. It's why judges are punished more harshly than lawyers for the same thing. We can understand this when it comes to adults, but we throw it out the window when we want to wage war on children. We say punish the child more harshly than the adult. If you have an adult who is 35 years old and commits a crime, a serious crime, and has the mentality of a 12-year-old child, that adult will be deemed to not be responsible because of this intellectual or mental impairment. This adult will be punished, but not as an adult. And the argument is why punish somebody when they have the mentality of a 12-year-old child? That's what the adult society says when they're dealing with an adult. Then you take a 12-year-old child with the mentality of a 12-year-old child who doesn't have the experience of this adult who is going to be given a break and that 12-year-old child is tried as an adult. That's what I mean by waging a war on young people. Senator Janssen and everybody on this floor knows that adults have had far more experience and time on this earth to be aware of alcohol and the laws related to alcohol consumption. Then you're going to punish children more harshly. You're even going to punish those not old enough to seek a driver's license. You want to get them before they are even old enough to seek a driver's license. Is that my time?

SENATOR CUDABACK: One minute. One minute, Senator.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: And these who are not old enough to seek a driver's license when they get old enough are forbidden to seek it until this six-month period has elapsed. What kind of craziness and idiocy is that? It's the craziness and idiocy of adults who have not been examples for their children, who have thrown up their hands and said, state, you do what you will with them. I failed in my responsibility as a parent, and I'm not going to assume it. So I'll say I got letters from people who said, treat children in this way and I will go by what they say. Not good legislating.

SENATOR CUDABACK: Thank you, Senator Chambers. Mr. Speaker, you're recognized for an announcement.

SPEAKER KRISTENSEN: Thank you, Mr. President. At this point in
